Excerpt from The Youth's Book of Persian Fables

As a hungry wolf was running across the plain, in search of food, he saw a hare fast asleep under a thicket, and lost in forgetfulness of all around her; he thought what a nice meal she would make, and began to creep slowly up, with his great mouth wide open, ready to snap her up; but his panting woke her; and she jumped up, and tried to run away. The wolf was so close to her, though, that she could not get off; so she stood trembling before him, half dead with fright. "Ho! ho! my dear," said the wolf, "have I found you at last? I have been longing to see you, and have looked for you under every bush, till I was quite tired." "O dear," said the hare, "I hope you will not think of eating up such a poor little creature as I am; I should be but a mouthful for such a great and mighty animal as you are.
