"First the man throws money at me to be his girl, and now he's telling me my fashion choices suck and calling me into his office whenever he's bored. Wouldn't be so bad if I didn't walk back out with wrinkles in my dress! My cat is more considerate!

Still, he's not so bad. He's actually quite considerate. Almost... loving. Come on Jasmine, get it together. He doesn't love you. He barely knows you. He's paying you for you to exist near him. No man who does that does it out of love.

Does he?"

Three weeks working for Ethan Cole are starting to take their toll on Jasmine. Not because he's demanding, ruthless, or cruel... but because he's the exact opposite! At no point in those three weeks has Ethan asked anything of her other than her personal assistant duties. What is he paying her three million dollars for, anyway?

While Jasmine acclimates to calling herself Ethan's paid girlfriend, she's further entrenched in his world - and in him. She doesn't want to admit it, but there's something about the quiet billionaire that intrigues her to the point of madness. Not just his good looks, his spending extravagant amounts of money on her wardrobe or Valentine's Day dinners, but the fact that the way he touches her and looks at her is full of the tenderness she longs for...

Even when he's tying to her bed and calling her the dirtiest names in the book!
