The question is whether...to accept the baser weaknesses as human or...to struggle against them as unworthy of a human being. Unsound theoretical principals can never lead to sound practical deeds.

A small mentality can only mangle a large truth. -Paul Brunton

In a Search in Secret Egypt, Paul Brunton wrote briefly of the street that grows red flowers—one of the seven steps awaiting all who would enter the secret chamber of the heart's mysteries. This is a detailed guide to this pivotal stage of spiritual development. It shows clearly how to claim one's full humanity through controlling, purifying, and transmuting the flowers of passion inherited from our animal nature.

Part 2, The Intellect, evaluates the thinking faculty. It demonstrates the transformative potential, and the limitations, of intellectual understanding in spiritual practice.
